IS REPUDIATED BY GERMANY

Disavows Rintelan, Under Arrest in London.

Looked Upon as Head of Various German Schemes In America-Career In United States Subject of Federal Grand Jury Probe.

Washington, Dec. 13.—Germany has officially repudiated Franz Rintelen, the German now under arrest in London, who was charged with having financed the pro-German plots and conspiracies in this country.

The repudiation was made in the form of an official statement given out at the German embassy by Count von Bernstorff, the German ambassador, acting on direct instructions from Berlin. The statement is:

"The German government entirely disavows Mr. Franz Rintelen and especially wishes to say that it issued no instructions of any kind that would have led him to violate American laws."

Rintelen, who was a prominent figure in Wall street at the time the various pro-German conspiracies were afoot, was generally looked upon as a personal friend of Kaiser Wilhelm and as having been the head of various schemes to further German propaganda. Among other things he was charged with being the backer of the proposed Huerta uprising in Mexico, the purpose of which was to embarrass the United States govern-

He was arrested in London under an alias, corresponding to the name set forth in the passport which he carried. It is charged that he previously endeavored to procure an American passport in the name of John V. Gates, a matter into which the federal grand jury in New York is now inquiring.

Coming as it does on the recall of Captains Boy-Ed and von Papen of the German embassy staff, whose activities in various pro-German schemes made them objectionable to the United States, the repudiation of Rintelen at the express direction of the Berlin government is believed to Mrs. Mary C. Adkisson, who had a reflect a determination on the part of

Do You Read Labels?

Domestic science teachers and food authorities are urging the housewife to carefully read the labels on all food articles.

The laws of most States compel food manufacturers to print the ingredients of their products on the label, and this enables consumers to distinguish healthful foods from those which may be deleterious.

High-grade baking powders are made of pure cream of tartar, derived from grapes. Royal Baking Powder is a type of the highest grade. It is healthful beyond a doubt and the safest and best to use.

The low-grade baking powders are made from alum, a mineral acid salt, or phosphate of lime.

Consumers can learn the character of the baking powder by referring to the label, which must state whether the contents include cream of tartar, alum or phosphate.

No time in the history of our country oil in a bushel of corn is as follows:

> According to the above, it can be seen that one barrel of concentrated slop is equal to 1.21 bushels of corn, so far as the valuable feeding constituents of the corn are concerned. In addition the fact must not be lost sight of that this feeding value is in the form of very fine stituents. In the raw corn the losses from imperfect mastication are enormous, droppings from cattle containing so much feed value on a corn diet that hogs may be fed on them. Here even, with no mastication, the food is all available. In addition it may be stated that considerable of the energy supplied by corn is used in its mastication, which is not required in this case.

LAHOMA

By JOHN BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS

Copyright, 1913, by the Bobbs-Merrill Company.

> CHAPTER XVII. Facing the Mob.

ZZOO started up, too excited to notice Wilfred's suddenly distorted face. It was no time to display a sense of the ludicrous. The young man hotly up." burst into passionate argument and reasonable hypothesis.

Waving aside Mizzoo's protest, Wilfred elaborated his theory of an Indian attack, described Brick's peaceable disposition, his gentleness to Lahoma, then dwelt on the friendship between himself and Brick and the relations between himself and Brick's ward.

"It all comes to this," Mizzoo declared: "If you could make me think Willock a harmless lamb, and as innocent, it wouldn't change conditions. This neighborhood calls for his life and'd take it if in reach, and my warrant calls for his arrest. All I can promise is to get him, if possible, behind the bars before the mob gets him in a rope.

Wilfred permitted himself the pleasure of taunting Mizzoo with the very evident truth that before Willock was hanged or imprisoned he must first be Mizzoo grinned good naturedly. "Yap. Well, we've got a clew locked up in jail right now that could tell us something, I judge, and will tell us something before set free. It's name is Bill Atkins. He's a wise old coon, but as our as a boiled owl-nothing as yet o be negotiated with him than if he was a bobcat catched in a trap. We're hoping time'll mellow him-time and the prospect of being took out and swung from the nearest limb."

Wilfred insisted on an immediate visit to Bill. "Brick declared he wouldn't tell Bill his hiding place," he said, "for he didn't want to get him into trouble. He'll tell me if he knows anything, and if he doesn't it's an outrage to shut him up, old as he is and as rheumatic as he's old."

On the way to the rudely improvised prison Mizzoo defended himself. "He wasn't too old and rheumatic to fight like a wildcat. Why, he had to be lifted up bodily and carried into his cell. Not a word can we get out of him or a bite of grub into him. I believe that old codger's just too obstinate to die!"

When they reached the prison door the crowd gathered about them. eager for news, watching Mizzoo unfasten the door as if he were unlocking the secret to Willock's whereabouts. There were loud imprecations on the head of the murderer and flerce prophecies as to what would happen to Bill if he preserved his incriminating silence. It seemed but a moment before hurrying forms from many directions packed themselves into a mass before the jail.

The cells were in the basement. The means of a flight of six steps leading to an unroofed platform before the door of the story proper. Mizzoo and Wilfred, standing on this platform, were lifted above the heads of perhaps a hundred men, who watched eagerly the dangling bunch of keys. Mizzoo had stationed three deputies at the foot of the steps to keep back the mob, for if the excited men once rushed into the jail nothing could check their course. Mizzoo whispered to Wilfred, "We'd better get in as quick as possible." The words were lost in the increas ing roar of voices. He spoke again: When I swing open the door that bunch will try to make a run for it. You jump inside and I'll be after you like a shot. We'll lock ourselves in'

"Hey, Mizzoo!" shouted a voice from the crowd. "bring out that old cuss. Drag him to the platform, we want to hear what he's got to say."

"Say, Mr. Sheriff! Tell him if he won't come to us, we'll go to him. We've got to know where Brick Willock's hiding, and that's all about it." "Sure!" growled a third. "What kind of a town is this anyway? A refuge

A struggle took place at the foot of the stairs, not so good naturedly as heretofore. A reasoning voice was heard: "Just let me say a word to the boys.

for highwaymen and murderers?"

'Yes!" called others, "let's hear him!" There was a surging forward, and a an was lifted literally over the heads the three deputies. He reached the platform breathless, disheveled, but triumphant. It was the survivor of Red Kimball's band. Mizzoo, mistaking his coming for a general rush, had hastily relocked the door, and he and Wilfred defended hemselves with drawn revolvers.

("I ain't up here to do no harm," called the ex-highwayman. "I ain't got rusty plows and machinery they left the spirit for warfare. My chief is scattered about after the three years' killed, my pards is dead. Even that inon may claim it's all Brick Willock. our powder dry, and we never saw say if he's bigger than the town, if Missoo in our cove again. So you see help it, then the town ain't as good as What kind of a reputation is that for you to send abroad? There's a man in this jail can tell you where Willock's hiding. Good day!"

The speaker was down the steps in two leaps, and the deputies drew aside to let him pass out. Civic pride, above all, civic ambition, had been touched to the quick. A hoarse roar followed the speech, and cries for Bill grew frantic. Mizzoo, afraid to unlock the door, stared at Wilfred in perplexity. "I told you they had civilization on the brain," he muttered. "The old times are past. I daresn't make a move toward that lock."

"Drop the keys behind you-I'll get 'em." Wilfred murmured. "Step a little forward. Say something to 'em." "Ain't got nothing to say," growled Mizzoo, glaring at the mob. "These boys are in the right of it; that's how I feel-cuss that obstinate old bobcat! It's his own fault if they string him

"Here they come!" Wilfred exclaim-"Steady now, old Mizzoo-we've whipped packs of wolves before today -coyotes crazy with hunger-big gray loafers in the rocks-eh, Mizzoo?" He shouted to the deputies who had been pushed against the railing, "Give it to 'em. boys!"

But the deputies did not fire, and the mob, though chafing with mad impatience, did not advance. It was a single figure that swept up the steps, unobstructed, aided, indeed, by the mass of packed men in the street-a figure slight and erect, tingling with the necessity of action to which every vein and muscle responded, tingling so vitally, so electrically, that the crowd also tingled, not understanding, but none the less thrilled.

"Lahoma!" Wilfred was at her side.

"Yes, I'm here." she returned breathlessly, her face flaming with excitement. "I'm going to talk to these people. Let me have that"- She took the revolver from the unresisting hand. uncocked it and slipped it into her bosom. Then she faced the mob and held up her empty hand.

It was the first time Lahoma had ever faced an audience larger than that composed of Brick and Bill and Wil-After her uplifted hand had brought tense silence she stood at a loss, her eyes big with the appeal her tongue refused to utter.

The mob was awed by that light in her eyes, by the crimson in her cheeks, by her beauty, freshness and grace. They would not proceed to violence while she stood there facing them. Her power she recognized, but she understood it was that of physical presence. When she was gone her influence would depart. They knew Brick and Bill had sheltered her from her tenderest years: they admired her fidelity. Whatever she might say to try to move their hearts would come from a sense of gratitude and would be received in tolerant silence. The more guilty the highwayman the more commendable her loyalty. But it would not change their purpose. As if waiting for a storm to pass they stood stolid and close mouthed, slightly bent forward.

unresisting, but unmoved. "I'm a western. girl." Lahoma said at last, "and ever since Brick Willeck gave me a home when I had none I've lived right over yonder at the foot of the mountains. I was there when the cattlemen came, before the Indians had given up this country, and I was here when the first settlers moved in and when the soldiers drove them out. I was living in the cove with Brick Willock when people came up from Texas and planted miles and miles of wheat, and I used to play with the cent stage driver what knew nothing homes. Then Old Man Walker came us is killed in the attack that Brick to Red River, sent his cowboys to Hock made on us in the dark and drive us out of the cove, and your sherhind our backs. How're you going iff led the bunch. And it was Brick grow when the whole world knows and myself that stood them off with nin't nothing but a den of snakes? our guns, our backs to the wall and he murders and stabs and you can't I ought to be able to talk to western men in a way they can appreciate, and him. My life's in danger. I don't if there's anybody here that's not a know if I'll draw another breath, western man-he couldn't understand our style anyhow-he'd better go where he's needed, for out west you need only western men-like Brick Willock. for instance."

At reference to the well known incident of Mizzoo's attempt to drive Willock from the cove there was a sudden wave of laughter, none the less hearty because Mizzoo's face had flushed and his mouth had opened sheepishly. But at the recurrence of Willock's name the crowd grew serious. They felt the justice of her claim that out west only western men were needed; they excused her for thinking Brick a model type. But let any one else hold him up before them as a model!

Lahoma's manner changed. It grew deeper and more forceful.

"Men, I want to talk to you about this case. Will you be the jury? Consider what kind of man swore out that warrant against Brick-the leader of a band of highwaymen! And who's his chief witness? You don't know Mr. Gledware, I do. You've heard he's a rich and influential citizen in the east. That's true. But I'm going to tell you something to show what he is, and what Brick Willock is-just one thing, that's all I'll say about the character of either. As to Red Kimball, you don't have to be told. I'm not going to talk about the general features of the caseas to whether Brick was ever a highwayman or not, as to whether he killed Red's brother to save me and my stepfather, or did it in cold blood; as to whether he held up the stage or not. These things you've discussed. You've formed opinions about them. I want to tell you something you haven't heard. Will you listen?"

At first no one spoke. Then from the crowd came a measured impartial voice: "We got lots of time."

She was not discouraged by the intimation in the tone that all her speaking was in vain and plunged into the midst of her parrative.

"One evening Brick came on a deserted mover's wagon. He'd traveled all day with nothing to eat or drink and he got into the wagon to escape the blistering sun. In there he found a dead woman, stretched on her pallet. He had a great curiosity to see her face, so he began lifting the cloth that covered her. He saw a pearl and onyx pin at her throat. It looked like one his mother used to wear. So he dropped the cloth and never looked at her face. She had died the evening before, and he knew she wouldn't have wanted and he knew she wouldn't have wanted 1912, credited by $72.00, paid Decem any one to see her then. And he dug ber 22, 1913; also the further sum of a grave in the sand, though she was $1,200.00 with interest from Sept, 6th, nothing to him, and buried her-never seeing her face-and covered the spot with a great pyramid of stones and prayed for her little girl-I was her little girl. The Indians had carried me away. You'll say that was a little thing; that anybody would have buried the poor, helpless body. Maybe so. But about not looking at her face—well, I don't know. It was a little thing, of course, but somehow it just seems to show that Brick Willock wasn't little-had something great in his soul, you know. Seems to show that he couldn't have been a common murderer. It's something you'll have to feel for yourselves. Nobody could explain it so you'd see if you don't un derstand already."

The men stared at her, somewhat be wildered, saying nothing. In some breasts a sense of something delicate. not to be defied, was stirred.

To Farmers & Stockmen

It is the report that the prevailing low prices of hogs is due to the cause of the corn crop failure in the State of Iowa which is a large hog-raising center. The farmers and stockmen of the State are forced to sacrifice their holdings, on account of having only produced one-fourth of their normal crop, and the present high price of corn makes feeding there prohibitive.

The dumping of all this stock on the market has influenced, downward, the general market. However, these conditions are only temporary, and are bound to have a reactionary effect.

Now is the time to buy feeders, when the price is low. Fatten them for the spring market, when the high prices will again prevail.

We can furnish Distillery Slop in tank cars containing 130 barrels to any point on the L., H. & St. L. between Stanley and Medora, Ky., at a cost per barrel of one-third of the selling price of a bushel of corn, which has a little better than an equivalent feeding value.

Any one desiring the Agency between the points above mentioned, will please write us at once.
